Filling bellies for backpacks

The Fill the Bus project, started by First National Bank of Newcastle, is in full swing again. The campaign kicked off with a bake sale at FNBT's lobby on May 27.

"Raising over $457 in this bake sale was a great way to kick off this year's campaign," FNBT Teller Brittany Ramanjulu said. "I am looking forward to all of our events this summer and doing it again next year."

The donated sweets for the bake sale were provided by each employee at FNBT Newcastle and a local business called Main Street Sweets and Eats.

"The experience was touching when people would get the baked goods they wanted but gave so much more than what we had priced," FNBT Teller Madison Prudhome said. "I am already ready for next year with a higher goal set to help more kids!"

The Fill the Bus project is designed to put 400 backpacks filled with school supplies into the hands of Newcastle elementary children. This effort is a series of fundraisers that will lead up to a carnival-style outdoor public event called Fill the Bus, which brings together 30+ local businesses and nonprofits to entertain and engage children and their families.
